They would have to start as installer's helper; the position of head installer will become available when the helper is trained and ready. The candidate should possess a Class A CDL [or be able to get] and have construction experience. Working with a Bobcat, concrete work, low-voltage electrical work, welding, carpentry, and mechanical skills are a definite plus. Basically, we are looking for someone who is comfortable working with anything from a shovel to a voltage meter. We also collect antique farm equipment and use it on the farm, experience with such would be helpful. You must be a self-starter and work with little or no supervision.
